Bryan: The attached news release is scheduled to be released later today. The release announces that Williams and Dominion are forming a joint venture to market a new pipeline project in Southern Pennsylvania . True to the information that both companies gave to your office before/during the Task Force meeting in July, there are no facilities proposed for Chester County as part of this project.

The announcement is being made to determine the level of interest from potential shippers for the project. We felt it was important to reach out to your office in advance of the release because it's a bit confusing since both companies were originally marketing separate projects: Dominion's Keystone Project and Transco's Rockies Connector Project. The name of the joint venture project is a hybrid of those two projects: Keystone Connector. The proposed route is essentially the same as the one proposed for Transco's Rockies Connector project—which does not impact Chester County . As you will undoubtedly remember, Dominion's proposed route for their Keystone project went through Chester County .

I hope this clarifies things a bit as I'm sure that you will get inquiries about this joint venture since the name is so similar to Dominion's proposed project.

I will keep you informed if the commercial aspects of the project advance beyond this initial marketing stage.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.
